Vulnerability Examples by Category

Category: Cross-Site Scripting: Persistent (20 Issues)

Abstract:

Line 154 of admin.php sends unvalidated data to a web browser, which can result in the browser executing malicious code.

Explanation:

Cross-site scripting (XSS) vulnerabilities occur when:

1. Data enters a web application through an untrusted source. In the case of Persistent (also known as Stored) XSS, the untrusted source is typically a database or other back-end data store, while in the case of Reflected XSS it is typically a web request.

2. The data is included in dynamic content that is sent to a web user without being validated.

The malicious content sent to the web browser often takes the form of a segment of JavaScript, but may also include HTML, Flash or any other type of code that the browser may execute. The variety of attacks based on XSS is almost limitless, but they commonly include transmitting private data like cookies or other session information to the attacker, redirecting the victim to web content controlled by the attacker, or performing other malicious operations on the user's machine under the guise of the vulnerable site.

Example 1: The following PHP code segment queries a database for an employee with a given ID and prints the corresponding employee's name.

<?php...
$con = mysql_connect($server,$user,$password);
...
$result = mysql_query("select * from emp where id="+eid);
$row = mysql_fetch_array($result) echo 'Employee name: ', mysql_result($row,0,'name');
...

This code functions correctly when the values of name are well-behaved, but it does nothing to prevent exploits if they are not. This code can appear less dangerous because the value of name is read from a database, whose contents are apparently managed by the application. However, if the value of name originates from user-supplied data, then the database can be a conduit for malicious content. Without proper input validation on all data stored in the database, an attacker may execute malicious commands in the user's web browser. This type of exploit, known as Persistent (or Stored) XSS, is particularly insidious because the indirection caused by the data store makes it more difficult to identify the threat and increases the possibility that the attack will affect multiple users. XSS got its start in this form with web sites that offered a "guestbook" to visitors. Attackers would include JavaScript in their guestbook entries, and all subsequent visitors to the guestbook page would execute the malicious code.

Example 2: The following PHP code segment reads an employee ID, eid, from an HTTP request and displays it to the user.

<?php
```

$eid = $_GET['eid'];
...
?>
...
<?php
echo "Employee ID: $eid";

As in Example 1, this code operates correctly if eid contains only standard alphanumeric text. If eid has a value that includes meta-characters or source code, then the code will be executed by the web browser as it displays the HTTP response.

As the examples demonstrate, XSS vulnerabilities are caused by code that includes unvalidated data in an HTTP response. There are three vectors by which an XSS attack can reach a victim:

- As in Example 1, the application stores dangerous data in a database or other trusted data store. The dangerous data is subsequently read back into the application and included in dynamic content. Persistent XSS exploits occur when an attacker injects dangerous content into a data store that is later read and included in dynamic content. From an attacker's perspective, the optimal place to inject malicious content is in an area that is displayed to either many users or particularly interesting users. Interesting users typically have elevated privileges in the application or interact with sensitive data that is valuable to the attacker. If one of these users executes malicious content, the attacker may be able to perform privileged operations on behalf of the user or gain access to sensitive data belonging to the user.

- As in Example 2, data is read directly from the HTTP request and reflected back in the HTTP response. Reflected XSS exploits occur when an attacker causes a user to supply dangerous content to a vulnerable web application, which is then reflected back to the user and executed by the web browser. The most common mechanism for delivering malicious content is to include it as a parameter in a URL that is posted publicly or e-mailed directly to victims. URLs constructed in this manner constitute the core of many phishing schemes, whereby an attacker convinces victims to visit a URL that refers to a vulnerable site. After the site reflects the attacker's content back to the user, the content is executed and proceeds to transfer private information, such as cookies that may include session information, from the user's machine to the attacker or perform other nefarious activities.

- A source outside the application stores dangerous data in a database or other data store, and the dangerous data is subsequently read back into the application as trusted data and included in dynamic content.

Recommendations:

The solution to XSS is to ensure that validation occurs in the correct places and checks for the correct properties.

Since XSS vulnerabilities occur when an application includes malicious data in its output, one logical approach is to validate data immediately before it leaves the application. However, because web applications often have complex and intricate code for generating dynamic content, this method is prone to errors of omission (missing validation). An effective way to mitigate this risk is to also perform input validation for XSS.

Web applications must validate their input to prevent other vulnerabilities, such as SQL injection, so augmenting an application's existing input validation mechanism to include checks for XSS is generally relatively easy. Despite its value, input validation for XSS does not take the place of rigorous output validation. An application may accept input through a shared data store or other trusted source, and that data store may accept input from a source that does not perform adequate input validation. Therefore, the application cannot implicitly rely on the safety of this or any other data. This means the best way to prevent XSS vulnerabilities is to validate everything that enters the application and leaves the application destined for the user.

The most secure approach to validation for XSS is to create a whitelist of safe characters that are allowed to appear in HTTP content and accept input composed exclusively of characters in the approved set. For example, a valid username might only include alpha-numeric characters or a phone number might only include digits 0-9. However, this solution is often infeasible in web applications because many characters that have special meaning to the browser should still be considered valid input once they are encoded, such as a web design bulletin board that must accept HTML fragments from its users.

A more flexible, but less secure approach is known as blacklisting, which selectively rejects or escapes potentially dangerous characters before using the input. In order to form such a list, you first need to understand the set of characters that hold special meaning for web browsers. Although the HTML standard defines what characters have special meaning, many web browsers try to correct common mistakes in HTML and may treat other characters as special in certain contexts, which is why we do not encourage the use of blacklists as a means to prevent XSS. The CERT(R) Coordination Center at the Software Engineering Institute at Carnegie Mellon University provides the following details about special characters in various contexts [1]:

In the content of a block-level element (in the middle of a paragraph of text):

- "<" is special because it introduces a tag.

- "&" is special because it introduces a character entity.

- ">" is special because some browsers treat it as special, on the assumption that the author of the page intended to include an opening "<", but omitted it in error.

The following principles apply to attribute values:

- In attribute values enclosed with double quotes, the double quotes are special because they mark the end of the attribute value.

- In attribute values enclosed with single quote, the single quotes are special because they mark the end of the attribute value.

- In attribute values without any quotes, white-space characters, such as space and tab, are special.

- "&" is special when used with certain attributes, because it introduces a character entity.

In URLs, for example, a search engine might provide a link within the results page that the user can click to re-run the search. This can be implemented by encoding the search query inside the URL, which introduces additional special characters:

- Space, tab, and new line are special because they mark the end of the URL.

- "&" is special because it either introduces a character entity or separates CGI parameters.

- Non-ASCII characters (that is, everything above 128 in the ISO-8859-1 encoding) are not allowed in URLs, so they are considered to be special in this context.

- The "%" symbol must be filtered from input anywhere parameters encoded with HTTP escape sequences are decoded by server-side code. For example, "%" must be filtered if input such as "%68%65%6C%6C%6F" becomes "hello" when it appears on the web page in question.

Within the body of a <SCRIPT> </SCRIPT>:

- Semicolons, parentheses, curly braces, and new line characters should be filtered out in situations where text could be inserted directly into a pre-existing script tag.

Server-side scripts:

- Server-side scripts that convert any exclamation characters (!) in input to double-quote characters (") on output might require additional filtering.

Other possibilities:

- If an attacker submits a request in UTF-7, the special character '<' appears as '+ADw-' and may bypass filtering. If the output is included in a page that does not explicitly specify an encoding format, then some browsers try to intelligently identify the encoding based on the content (in this case, UTF-7).

Once you identify the correct points in an application to perform validation for XSS attacks and what special characters the validation should consider, the next challenge is to identify how your validation handles special characters. If special characters are not considered valid input to the application, then you can reject any input that contains special characters as invalid. A second option in this situation is to remove special characters with filtering. However, filtering has the side effect of changing any visual representation of the filtered content and may be unacceptable in circumstances where the integrity of the input must be preserved for display.

If input containing special characters must be accepted and displayed accurately, validation must encode any special characters to remove their significance. A complete list of ISO 8859-1 encoded values for special characters is provided as part of the official HTML specification [2].

Many application servers attempt to limit an application's exposure to cross-site scripting vulnerabilities by providing implementations for the functions responsible for setting certain specific HTTP response content that perform validation for the characters essential to a cross-site scripting attack. Do not rely on the server running your application to make it secure. When an application is developed there are no guarantees about what application servers it will run on during its lifetime. As standards and known exploits evolve, there are no guarantees that application servers will also stay in sync.

Tips:

1. The Fortify Secure Coding Rulepacks warn about SQL Injection and Access Control: Database issues when untrusted data is written to a database and also treat the database as a source of untrusted data, which can lead to XSS vulnerabilities. If the database is a trusted resource in your environment, use custom filters to filter out dataflow issues that include the DATABASE taint flag or originate from database sources. Nonetheless, it is often still a good idea to validate everything read from the database.

2. Even though URL encoding untrusted data protects against many XSS attacks, some browsers (specifically, Internet Explorer 6 and 7 and possibly others) automatically decode content at certain locations within the Document Object Model (DOM) prior to passing it to the JavaScript interpreter. To reflect this danger, the rulepacks no longer treat URL encoding routines as sufficient to protect against cross-site scripting. Data values that are URL encoded and subsequently output will cause Fortify to report Cross-Site Scripting: Poor Validation vulnerabilities.

3. Due to the dynamic nature of PHP, you may see a large number of findings in PHP library files. Consider using a filter file to hide specific findings from view. For instructions on creating a filter file, see Advanced Options in the Fortify Static Code Analyzer User Guide.

<table>
<tr><th colspan="2">Category: JSON Injection (7 Issues)</th></tr>
</table>

Abstract:

On line 28 of report.php, the method questionnaire_assessments_report() writes unvalidated input into JSON. This call could allow an attacker to inject arbitrary elements or attributes into the JSON entity.

Explanation:

JSON injection occurs when:

1. Data enters a program from an untrusted source.

2. The data is written to a JSON stream.

Applications typically use JSON to store data or send messages. When used to store data, JSON is often treated like cached data and may potentially contain sensitive information. When used to send messages, JSON is often used in conjunction with a RESTful service and can be used to transmit sensitive information such as authentication credentials.

The semantics of JSON documents and messages can be altered if an application constructs JSON from unvalidated input. In a relatively benign case, an attacker may be able to insert extraneous elements that cause an application to throw an exception while parsing a JSON document or request. In a more serious case, such as ones that involves JSON injection, an attacker may be able to insert extraneous elements that allow for the predictable manipulation of business critical values within a JSON document or request. In some cases, JSON injection can lead to cross-site scripting or dynamic code evaluation.

Example 1: The following PHP code serializes user account authentication information for non-privileged users (those with a role of "default" as opposed to privileged users with a role of "admin") from user-controlled URL parameters username and password to the JSON file located at ~/user_info.json:

...

$username = $_GET['username'];

$password = $_GET['password'];

$user_info_json_string = '{"role":"default","username":"' . $username . '","password":"' . $password . '"}';

$user_info_json_file = fopen('~/user_info.json', 'w');

fwrite($user_info_json_file, $user_info_json_string);

fclose($user_info_json_file);

Yet, because the JSON serialization is performed using string concatenation, the untrusted data in username and password will not be validated to escape JSON-related special characters. This allows a user to arbitrarily insert JSON keys, possibly changing the structure of the serialized JSON. In this example, if the non-privileged user mallory with password Evil123! were to append %22,%22role%22:%22 to her username and pass this value to the username URL parameter, the resulting JSON saved to ~/user_info.json would be:

"role":"default",

"username":"mallory",

"role":"admin",

"password":"Evil123!"

If this serialized JSON file were then deserialized using PHP's native json_decode() function as so:

$user_info_json_string = file_get_contents('user_info.json', 'r');

$user_info_json_data = json_decode($user_info_json_string);

The resulting values for username, password, and role in $user_info_json_data would be mallory, Evil123!, and admin respectively. Without further verification that the values within deserialized JSON data are valid, the application will incorrectly assign user mallory "admin" privileges.

Recommendations:

When writing user supplied data to JSON some guidelines should be followed:

1. Don't create JSON attributes whose names are derived from user input.

2. Ensure that all serialization to JSON is performed using a safe serialization function that delimits untrusted data within single or double quotes and escapes any special characters.

Example 2: The following PHP code implements the same functionality as that in Example 1, but instead uses json_encode() rather than string concatenation to serialize the data, therefore ensuring that any untrusted data is properly delimited and escaped:

...

$username = $_GET['username'];
```

$password = $_GET['password'];

$user_info_array = array('role' => 'default', 'username' => $username, 'password' => $password);

$user_info_json_string = json_encode($user_info_array);

$user_info_json_file = fopen('~/user_info.json', 'w');

fwrite($user_info_json_file, $user_info_json_string);
```

fclose($user_info_json_file);

Category: Path Manipulation (7 Issues)
Abstract:

Attackers are able to control the file system path argument to fopen() at get_claim_file.php line 84, which allows them to access or modify otherwise protected files.

Explanation:

Path manipulation errors occur when the following two conditions are met:

1. An attacker is able to specify a path used in an operation on the file system.

2. By specifying the resource, the attacker gains a capability that would not otherwise be permitted.

For example, the program may give the attacker the ability to overwrite the specified file or run with a configuration controlled by the attacker.

Example 1: The following code uses input from an HTTP request to create a file name. The programmer has not considered the possibility that an attacker could provide a file name such as "../../tomcat/conf/server.xml", which causes the application to delete one of its own configuration files.

$rName = $_GET['reportName'];

$rFile = fopen("/usr/local/apfr/reports/" . rName,"a+");

...

unlink($rFile);

Example 2: The following code uses input from a configuration file to determine which file to open and echo back to the user. If the program runs with adequate privileges and malicious users can change the configuration file, they can use the program to read any file on the system that ends with the extension .txt.

...

$filename = $CONFIG_TXT['sub'] . ".txt";

$handle = fopen($filename,"r");

$amt = fread($handle, filesize($filename));

echo $amt;

...

Recommendations:

The best way to prevent path manipulation is with a level of indirection: create a list of legitimate resource names that a user is allowed to specify, and only allow the user to select from the list. With this approach the input provided by the user is never used directly to specify the resource name.

In some situations this approach is impractical because the set of legitimate resource names is too large or too hard to keep track of. Programmers often resort to blacklisting in these situations. Blacklisting selectively rejects or escapes potentially dangerous characters before using the input. However, any such list of unsafe characters is likely to be incomplete and will almost certainly become out of date. A better approach is to create a whitelist of characters that are allowed to appear in the resource name and accept input composed exclusively of characters in the approved set.

Tips:

1. If the program is performing custom input validation you are satisfied with, use the Fortify Custom Rules Editor to create a cleanse rule for the validation routine.

2. Implementation of an effective blacklist is notoriously difficult. One should be skeptical if validation logic requires blacklisting. Consider different types of input encoding and different sets of meta-characters that might have special meaning when interpreted by different operating systems, databases, or other resources. Determine whether or not the blacklist can be updated easily, correctly, and completely if these requirements ever change.

3. Due to the dynamic nature of PHP, you may see a large number of findings in PHP library files. Consider using a filter file to hide specific findings from view. For instructions on creating a filter file, see Advanced Options in the Fortify Static Code Analyzer User Guide.

Category: Denial of Service: Regular Expression (3 Issues)
Abstract:

Untrusted data is passed to the application and used as a regular expression. This can cause the thread to overconsume CPU resources.

Explanation:

There is a vulnerability in implementations of regular expression evaluators and related methods that can cause the thread to hang when evaluating regular expressions that contain a grouping expression that is itself repeated. Additionally, any regular expression that contains alternate subexpressions that overlap one another can also be exploited. This defect can be used to execute a Denial of Service (DoS) attack.

Example:

(e+)+

([a-zA-Z]+)*

(e|ee)+

There are no known regular expression implementations which are immune to this vulnerability. All platforms and languages are vulnerable to this attack.

Recommendations:

Do not allowed untrusted data to be used as regular expression patterns.

Category: Command Injection (2 Issues)
Abstract:

Line 68 in fax_view.php calls passthru() with a command built from untrusted data. This call can cause the program to execute malicious commands on behalf of an attacker.

Explanation:

Command injection vulnerabilities take two forms:

- An attacker can change the command that the program executes: the attacker explicitly controls what the command is.

- An attacker can change the environment in which the command executes: the attacker implicitly controls what the command means.

In this case we are primarily concerned with the first scenario, the possibility that an attacker may be able to control the command that is executed. Command injection vulnerabilities of this type occur when:

1. Data enters the application from an untrusted source.

2. The data is used as or as part of a string representing a command that is executed by the application.

3. By executing the command, the application gives an attacker a privilege or capability that the attacker would not otherwise have.

Example 1: The following code from a system utility uses the system property APPHOME to determine the directory in which it is installed and then executes an initialization script based on a relative path from the specified directory.

...
$home = $_ENV['APPHOME'];

$cmd = $home . $INITCMD;

system(cmd);
...

The code in Example 1 allows an attacker to execute arbitrary commands with the elevated privilege of the application by modifying the system property APPHOME to point to a different path containing a malicious version of INITCMD. Because the program does not validate the value read from the environment, if an attacker can control the value of the system property APPHOME, then they can fool the application into running malicious code and take control of the system.

Example 2: The following code is from an administrative web application designed to allow users to kick off a backup of an Oracle database using a batch-file wrapper around the rman utility and then run a cleanup.bat script to delete some temporary files. The script rmanDB.bat accepts a single command line parameter, which specifies the type of backup to perform. Because access to the database is restricted, the application runs the backup as a privileged user.

...
$btype = $_GET['backuptype'];

$cmd = "cmd.exe /K \"c:\\util\\rmanDB.bat " . $btype . "&&c:\\util\\cleanup.bat\"";

system(cmd);

The problem here is that the program does not do any validation on the backuptype parameter read from the user. Typically the Runtime.exec() function will not execute multiple commands, but in this case the program first runs the cmd.exe shell in order to run multiple commands with a single call to Runtime.exec(). Once the shell is invoked, it will allow for the execution of multiple commands separated by two ampersands. If an attacker passes a string of the form "&& del c:\\dbms*.*", then the application will execute this command along with the others specified by the program. Because of the nature of the application, it runs with the privileges necessary to interact with the database, which means whatever command the attacker injects will run with those privileges as well.

Example 3: The following code is from a web application that allows users access to an interface through which they can update their password on the system. Part of the process for updating passwords in certain network environments is to run a make command in the /var/yp directory, the code for which is shown below.

$result = shell_exec("make");
...

The problem here is that the program does not specify an absolute path for make and fails to clean its environment prior to executing the call to Runtime.exec(). If an attacker can modify the $PATH variable to point to a malicious binary called make and cause the program to be executed in their environment, then the malicious binary will be loaded instead of the one intended. Because of the nature of the application, it runs with the privileges necessary to perform system operations, which means the attacker's make will now be run with these privileges, possibly giving the attacker complete control of the system.

Recommendations:

Do not allow users to have direct control over the commands executed by the program. In cases where user input must affect the command to be run, use the input only to make a selection from a predetermined set of safe commands. If the input appears to be malicious, the value passed to the command execution function should either default to some safe selection from this set or the program should decline to execute any command at all.

In cases where user input must be used as an argument to a command executed by the program, this approach often becomes impractical because the set of legitimate argument values is too large or too hard to keep track of. Developers often fall back on blacklisting in these situations. Blacklisting selectively rejects or escapes potentially dangerous characters before using the input. Any list of unsafe characters is likely to be incomplete and will be heavily dependent on the system where the commands are executed. A better approach is to create a whitelist of characters that are allowed to appear in the input and accept input composed exclusively of characters in the approved set.

An attacker may indirectly control commands executed by a program by modifying the environment in which they are executed. The environment should not be trusted and precautions should be taken to prevent an attacker from using some manipulation of the environment to perform an attack. Whenever possible, commands should be controlled by the application and executed using an absolute path. In cases where the path is not known at compile time, such as for cross-platform applications, an absolute path should be constructed from trusted values during execution. Command values and paths read from configuration files or the environment should be sanity-checked against a set of invariants that define valid values.

Other checks can sometimes be performed to detect if these sources may have been tampered with. For example, if a configuration file is world-writable, the program might refuse to run. In cases where information about the binary to be executed is known in advance, the program may perform checks to verify the identity of the binary. If a binary should always be owned by a particular user or have a particular set of access permissions assigned to it, these properties can be verified programmatically before the binary is executed.

Although it may be impossible to completely protect a program from an imaginative attacker bent on controlling the commands the program executes, be sure to apply the principle of least privilege wherever the program executes an external command: do not hold privileges that are not essential to the execution of the command.

Category: Cookie Security: HTTPOnly not Set (2 Issues)
Abstract:

The program creates a cookie in index.php at line 87, but fails to set the HttpOnly flag to true.

Explanation:

All major browsers support the HttpOnly cookie property that prevents client-side scripts from accessing the cookie. Cross-site scripting attacks often access cookies in an attempt to steal session identifiers or authentication tokens. When HttpOnly is not enabled, attackers may more easily access user cookies.

Example 1: The code in the example below creates a cookie without setting the HttpOnly property.

setcookie("emailCookie", $email, 0, "/", "www.example.com", TRUE); //Missing 7th parameter to set HttpOnly

Recommendations:

Enable the HttpOnly property when creating cookies. This can be done by setting the HttpOnly parameter in the setcookie() call to true.

Example 2: The code in the example below creates the same cookie as the code in Example 1, but this time sets the HttpOnly parameter to true.

setcookie("emailCookie", $email, 0, "/", "www.example.com", TRUE, TRUE);

Do not be lulled into a false sense of security by HttpOnly. As several mechanisms for bypassing it have been developed, it is not completely effective.

Category: Privacy Violation: Autocomplete (2 Issues)

Abstract:

The form in settingsnotification.php uses autocompletion on line 130, which allows some browsers to retain sensitive information in their history.

Explanation:

With autocompletion enabled, some browsers retain user input across sessions, which could allow someone using the computer after the initial user to see information previously submitted.

Recommendations:

Explicitly disable autocompletion on forms or sensitive inputs. By disabling autocompletion, information previously entered will not be presented back to the user as they type. It will also disable the "remember my password" functionality of most major browsers.

Example 1: In an HTML form, disable autocompletion for all input fields by explicitly setting the value of the autocomplete attribute to off on the form tag.

<form method="post" autocomplete="off">

Address: <input name="address" />

Password: <input name="password" type="password" />

</form>

Example 2: Alternatively, disable autocompletion for specific input fields by explicitly setting the value of the autocomplete attribute to off on the corresponding tags.

<form method="post">

Address: <input name="address" />

Password: <input name="password" type="password" autocomplete="off"/>

</form>

Note that the default value of the autocomplete attributed is on. Therefore do not omit the attribute when dealing with sensitive inputs.

Category: Header Manipulation (1 Issues)
Abstract:

Including unvalidated data in an HTTP response header can enable cache-poisoning, cross-site scripting, cross-user defacement, page hijacking, cookie manipulation or open redirect.

Explanation:

Header Manipulation vulnerabilities occur when:

1. Data enters a web application through an untrusted source, most frequently an HTTP request.

2. The data is included in an HTTP response header sent to a web user without being validated.

As with many software security vulnerabilities, Header Manipulation is a means to an end, not an end in itself. At its root, the vulnerability is straightforward: an attacker passes malicious data to a vulnerable application, and the application includes the data in an HTTP response header.

One of the most common Header Manipulation attacks is HTTP Response Splitting. To mount a successful HTTP Response Splitting exploit, the application must allow input that contains CR (carriage return, also given by %0d or \r) and LF (line feed, also given by %0a or \n)characters into the header. These characters not only give attackers control of the remaining headers and body of the response the application intends to send, but also allows them to create additional responses entirely under their control.

Many of today's modern application servers will prevent the injection of malicious characters into HTTP headers. For example, recent versions of PHP will generate a warning and stop header creation when new lines are passed to the header() function. If your version of PHP prevents setting headers with new line characters, then your application is not vulnerable to HTTP Response Splitting. However, solely filtering for new line characters can leave an application vulnerable to Cookie Manipulation or Open Redirects, so care must still be taken when setting HTTP headers with user input.

Example: The following code segment reads the location from an HTTP request and sets it in the header location field of an HTTP response.

<?php
$location = $_GET['some_location'];
...
header("location: $location");
?>

Assuming a string consisting of standard alpha-numeric characters, such as "index.html", is submitted in the request the HTTP response including this cookie might take the following form:

HTTP/1.1 200 OK

...

location: index.html

...

However, because the value of the location is formed of unvalidated user input the response will only maintain this form if the value submitted for some_location does not contain any CR and LF characters. If an attacker submits a malicious string, such as "index.html\r\nHTTP/1.1 200 OK\r\n...", then the HTTP response would be split into two responses of the following form:

HTTP/1.1 200 OK

...

location: index.html

HTTP/1.1 200 OK

...

Clearly, the second response is completely controlled by the attacker and can be constructed with any header and body content desired. The ability of attacker to construct arbitrary HTTP responses permits a variety of resulting attacks, including: cross-user defacement, web and browser cache poisoning, cross-site scripting and page hijacking.

Cross-User Defacement: An attacker will be able to make a single request to a vulnerable server that will cause the server to create two responses, the second of which may be misinterpreted as a response to a different request, possibly one made by another user sharing the same TCP connection with the server. This can be accomplished by convincing the user to submit the malicious request themselves, or remotely in situations where the attacker and the user share a common TCP connection to the server, such as a shared proxy server. In the best case, an attacker may leverage this ability to convince users that the application has been hacked, causing users to lose confidence in the security of the application. In the worst case, an attacker may provide specially crafted content designed to mimic the behavior of the application but redirect private information, such as account numbers and passwords, back to the attacker.

Cache Poisoning: The impact of a maliciously constructed response can be magnified if it is cached either by a web cache used by multiple users or even the browser cache of a single user. If a response is cached in a shared web cache, such as those commonly found in proxy servers, then all users of that cache will continue receive the malicious content until the cache entry is purged. Similarly, if the response is cached in the browser of an individual user, then that user will continue to receive the malicious content until the cache entry is purged, although only the user of the local browser instance will be affected.

Cross-Site Scripting: Once attackers have control of the responses sent by an application, they have a choice of a variety of malicious content to provide users. Cross-site scripting is common form of attack where malicious JavaScript or other code included in a response is executed in the user's browser. The variety of attacks based on XSS is almost limitless, but they commonly include transmitting private data like cookies or other session information to the attacker, redirecting the victim to web content controlled by the attacker, or performing other malicious operations on the user's machine under the guise of the vulnerable site. The most common and dangerous attack vector against users of a vulnerable application uses JavaScript to transmit session and authentication information back to the attacker who can then take complete control of the victim's account.

Page Hijacking: In addition to using a vulnerable application to send malicious content to a user, the same root vulnerability can also be leveraged to redirect sensitive content generated by the server and intended for the user to the attacker instead. By submitting a request that results in two responses, the intended response from the server and the response generated by the attacker, an attacker may cause an intermediate node, such as a shared proxy server, to misdirect a response generated by the server for the user to the attacker. Because the request made by the attacker generates two responses, the first is interpreted as a response to the attacker's request, while the second remains in limbo. When the user makes a legitimate request through the same TCP connection, the attacker's request is already waiting and is interpreted as a response to the victim's request. The attacker then sends a second request to the server, to which the proxy server responds with the server generated request intended for the victim, thereby compromising any sensitive information in the headers or body of the response intended for the victim.

Cookie Manipulation: When combined with attacks like Cross-Site Request Forgery, attackers may change, add to, or even overwrite a legitimate user's cookies.

Open Redirect: Allowing unvalidated input to control the URL used in a redirect can aid phishing attacks.

Recommendations:

The solution to Header Manipulation is to ensure that input validation occurs in the correct places and checks for the correct properties.

Since Header Manipulation vulnerabilities occur when an application includes malicious data in its output, one logical approach is to validate data immediately before it leaves the application. However, because web applications often have complex and intricate code for generating responses dynamically, this method is prone to errors of omission (missing validation). An effective way to mitigate this risk is to also perform input validation for Header Manipulation.

Web applications must validate their input to prevent other vulnerabilities, such as SQL injection, so augmenting an application's existing input validation mechanism to include checks for Header Manipulation is generally relatively easy. Despite its value, input validation for Header Manipulation does not take the place of rigorous output validation. An application may accept input through a shared data store or other trusted source, and that data store may accept input from a source that does not perform adequate input validation. Therefore, the application cannot implicitly rely on the safety of this or any other data. This means the best way to prevent Header Manipulation vulnerabilities is to validate everything that enters the application or leaves the application destined for the user.

The most secure approach to validation for Header Manipulation is to create a whitelist of safe characters that are allowed to appear in HTTP response headers and accept input composed exclusively of characters in the approved set. For example, a valid name might only include alpha-numeric characters or an account number might only include digits 0-9.

A more flexible, but less secure approach is known as blacklisting, which selectively rejects or escapes potentially dangerous characters before using the input. In order to form such a list, you first need to understand the set of characters that hold special meaning in HTTP response headers. Although the CR and LF characters are at the heart of an HTTP response splitting attack, other characters, such as ':' (colon) and '=' (equal), have special meaning in response headers as well.

Once you identify the correct points in an application to perform validation for Header Manipulation attacks and what special characters the validation should consider, the next challenge is to identify how your validation handles special characters. The application should reject any input destined to be included in HTTP response headers that contains special characters, particularly CR and LF, as invalid.

Many application servers attempt to limit an application's exposure to HTTP response splitting vulnerabilities by providing implementations for the functions responsible for setting HTTP headers and cookies that perform validation for the characters essential to an HTTP response splitting attack. Do not rely on the server running your application to make it secure. When an application is developed there are no guarantees about what application servers it will run on during its lifetime. As standards and known exploits evolve, there are no guarantees that application servers will also stay in sync.

Category: Password Management: Insecure Submission (1 Issues)
Number of Issues

Abstract:

The form in mfa_totp.php submits a password as part of an HTTP GET request on line 122, which will cause the password to be displayed, logged, and stored in the browser cache.

Explanation:

By convention, the parameters associated with an HTTP GET request are not treated as sensitive data, so web servers log them, proxies cache them, and web browsers do not make an effort to conceal them. Sending a password or other sensitive data as part of an HTTP GET will likely cause the data to be mishandled and potentially revealed to an attacker.

Example 1: In the example below, new user password is submitted via an HTTP GET request.

<form method="get">

Name of new user: <input type="text" name="username">

Password for new user: <input type="password" name="user_passwd">

<input type="submit" name="action" value="Create User">

</form>

Also, note that the default value of the method attributed is GET, thus omitting the attribute results in the same outcome.

Recommendations:

Avoid sending sensitive data, such as passwords, via an HTTP GET request. Sensitive data should travel from the browser to the server using HTTP POST, not HTTP GET.

Example 2: In the example below, new user password is submitted via an HTTP POST request.

<form method="post">

Name of new user: <input type="text" name="username">

Password for new user: <input type="password" name="user_passwd">

<input type="submit" name="action" value="Create User">

</form>

HTML5 adds the ability to specify the formmethod attribute as part of the submit and image input tags, and the value of this attribute overrides the value of the method attribute of the corresponding form tag.

Example 3: In the example below, new user password is also submitted via an HTTP POST request, which is specified by the formmethod attribute of the submit input tag.

<form method="get">

Name of new user: <input type="text" name="username">

Password for new user: <input type="password" name="user_passwd">

<input type="submit" name="action" value="Create User" formmethod="post">

</form>

However, be aware that if the value of the formmethod attribute is set to get, the form will be submitted via an HTTP GET request no matter what the method attribute of the corresponding form tag specifies.

Avoid sending sensitive data via an HTTP redirect, because it causes the user's web browser to issue an HTTP GET request. The application should either store the sensitive data in a session object so that it does not need to be transmitted back to the browser or simply discard the data and ask the user to enter it again. Other options, such as embedding the sensitive data in a web page that automatically posts its data, are also problematic because the web page may be cached by a proxy or by the web browser. As is often the case, security may need to trump usability in this instance.

Abstract:

The program invokes extract(), which can overwrite global variables and might open the door for attackers.

Explanation:

Functions that can overwrite global variables that are already initialized can allow an attacker to influence the execution of code that relies on the overwritten variables.

can overwrite global variables.

Example 1: If an attacker supplies a malicious value for str in the following segment of PHP code, then the call to mb_parse_str() might overwrite any arbitrary variables, including first. In this case, if a malicious value that contains JavaScript overwrites first, then the program is vulnerable to cross-site scripting.

```php
<?php
$first="User";
...
$str =  $_SERVER['QUERY_STRING'];
mb_parse_str($str);
echo $first;
?>

Recommendations:

Prevent functions that can overwrite global variables from doing so in the following ways:

- Invoke mb_parse_str(string $encoded_string [, array &$result]) with the second argument, which captures the result of the operation and prevents the function from overwriting global variables.

- Invoke extract(array $var_array [, int $extract_type [, string $prefix]]) with the second argument set to EXTR_SKIP, which prevents the function from overwriting global variables that are already defined.

Example 2: The following code uses a second argument to mb_parse_str() to mitigate the vulnerability from Example 1.

```php
<?php
$first="User";
...
$str =  $_SERVER['QUERY_STRING'];
mb_parse_str($str, $output);
echo $first;

Category: XSLT Injection (1 Issues)
Abstract:

On line 222 of EncountermanagerTable.php, the method getccdaashtml() writes XML unvalidated input. This call could allow an attacker to inject arbitrary XSL elements into the XSL stylesheet.

Explanation:

XSLT injection occurs when:

1. Data enters a program from an untrusted source.

2. The data is written to an XSL stylesheet.

Applications typically use XSL stylesheet to transform XML documents from one format to another. XSL stylesheets include special functions which enhance the transformation process but introduce additional vulnerabilities if used incorrectly.

The semantics of XSL stylesheets and processing can be altered if an attacker has the ability to write XSL elements in a stylesheet. An attacker could alter the output of a stylesheet such that a XSS (cross-site scripting) attack was enabled, expose the contents of local file system resources, or execute arbitrary PHP commands. If the attacker had complete control over the stylesheet submitted to the application, then the attacker could also execute an XXE (Xml eXternal Entity) injection attack.

Example 1: Here is some code that is vulnerable to XSLT Injection:

...
<?php

$xml = new DOMDocument;
$xml->load('local.xml');

$xsl = new DOMDocument;
$xsl->load($_GET['key']);

$processor = new XSLTProcessor;
$processor->registerPHPFunctions();
$processor->importStyleSheet($xsl);

echo $processor->transformToXML($xml);

?>
...

The code above results in three different exploits when the attacker may pass the identified XSL to the XSTL processor:

1. XSS:

<xsl:stylesheet version="1.0" xmlns:xsl="http://www.w3.org/1999/XSL/Transform" xmlns:php="http://php.net/xsl">
<xsl:template match="/">
<script>alert(123)</script>
</xsl:template>
</xsl:stylesheet>

When the XSL stylesheet is processed, the <script> tag is rendered to the victim's browser allowing a cross-site scripting attack to be performed.

2. Reading of arbitrary files on the server's file system:

<xsl:stylesheet version="1.0" xmlns:xsl="http://www.w3.org/1999/XSL/Transform" xmlns:php="http://php.net/xsl">
<xsl:template match="/">
<xsl:copy-of select="document('/etc/passwd')"/>
</xsl:template>
</xsl:stylesheet>

The above XSL stylesheet will return the contents of the /etc/passwd file.

3. Execution of arbitrary PHP code:

The XSLT processor has the ability to expose native PHP language methods as XSLT functions by enabling "registerPHPFunctions".

<xsl:stylesheet version="1.0" xmlns:xsl="http://www.w3.org/1999/XSL/Transform" xmlns:php="http://php.net/xsl">
<xsl:template match="/">
<xsl:value-of select="php:function('passthru','ls -la')"/>
</xsl:template>
</xsl:stylesheet>

The above stylesheet will output the results of the "ls" command run on the server.

Recommendations:

When writing user supplied data to XSL stylesheets some guidelines should be followed:

1. Validate input and whitelist to known good values.

2. XML entity encodes user input before writing to XML.
